PROFILE

I started my career as a secondary school English teacher and then worked in children's services within a number of local authorities, including Tower Hamlets and the London Borough of Enfield over the course of 8 years. I'm originally from Yorkshire but we settled in London in 2011. After working in project management and commissioning in education, I then moved into health education commissioning in the NHS and stayed there for 6 years until my son was diagnosed, after which I decided to stay home and focus on his needs. For the past three years, I've been volunteering for the North Central East London NHS CCG (now the NCEL Integrated Care Board) to represent and voice the needs of neuro diverse children and young people.

It's been very rewarding supporting my son and advocating for his needs and I feel that Oaktree School is a great fit for him. Therefore, I'd like to bring my professional experience in education and health and my personal experience as a mum to further support the school and its community.
